AN INDISCREET JUROR.

1812, in the Mexican war and was for three months a teamster of the Union side in Case and Was Discharged.

He Expressed an Opinion on the Roster MADISON, Wis., March 3.-A sensation was sprung on the State Roster printing suit to-day, when attorney Olin, of the prosecution, announced to the court that one juryman had formed and publicly expressed an opinion of the innocence of the defendants. The juryman was a man named Reible. The statement was supported by five affidavits of university students who had heard juror Reible make the statements at the dinner table where all boarded. The counsel held a conference and agreed that Reible must be excused. but the defense was unwilling to proceed with eleven jurors. Judge Seibecker or-dered that the jury be discharged and the sheriff issue a special venire for thirty jurors, returnable at 10 o'clock Monday morning, when the whole trial will have to be commenced over. The court appointed at-torneys Rufus B. Smith and F. W. Hall to examine into the charge against juror Reible and to report to the court for further proceedings on the court's own motion. Juror Reible is a substantial farmer of the town of Roxbury, and his action was much of a surprise to his friends and the public. The court ruled that the text of the affidavit should not be published to avoid creating prejudice in the case.

"IF CHRIST COME TO CHICAGO."

What Editor Stead Says of the Wickedest City in His New Book.

CHICAGO, March 3 .- Editor W. T. Stead and his son William left Chicago for the East yesterday, and next Wednesday will sail for England. Before leaving, Mr. Stead finished reading the proof of his forthcoming book, "If Christ Came to Chicago." In this work Mr. Stead scores the City Council for its "boodle" proclivities, condemns the custom of unequel taxation and viciously attacks the social evil and those who own property which is used for immoral purposes. Recent movements of the A. P. A. in this country have attracted Mr. Stead's attention, and by means of interviews with leading Catholics and members of the A. P. A. he has gathered an immense amount of data. This information, together with his own observations and deductions, he will present to the Pope during the coming summer. As the matter is assuming large proportions, he thinks the Pope should have the benefit of the opinion of one who is not affiliated with either party.

The statement made by Lieutenant Lyman as to his failure to take the sights is considered to be damaging to him. Judge Advocate Kelly says this was contrary to the rules of the navy, as they require the morning sight must be taken by the navigator and not by any one else.

QUINCY IN A PICKLE

Cleveland's Massachusetts Friend Put in a Bad Light.

Made Damaging Admissions Yesterday Concerning His Part in Securing a Patent Office Printing Contract.

WASHINGTON, March 3 .- The Senate committee on printing this morning resumed the investigation of the alleged irregularities in letting the contract for printing the Patent Office Gazette, Ex-Assistant Secretary of State Quincy took the oath and testified as to what he had done to secure the award of the printing contract to the National Lithographing Company. This contract, he said, had nothing to do with the State Department, with which he was connected. He considered that he was acting as an individual, and not as an official. He entered a general denial of charges that he was interested beneficially in the National Lithographing Company, that he knew beforehand that Mr. Seymour was to be appointed Commissioner, and that he had sought to secure work in the department for the National Company in April of last year. Horace Kenney, a personal and political friend of his, had discussed the work of lithographing for the Patent Office with him. He asked him (Quincy) to secure information for him as to the work with a view to bidding and securing the work from the present company. Mr. Quincy related circumstances of several conversations he had with Commissioner Seymour on the subject and his introduction of Mr. Kenney to the Commissioner. It had not occurred to him that it was inconsistent with his position in the State Department to make such a recommendation to an official in another department.

Senator Manderson inquired whether he thought it was in accordance with official ethics that one competitor should be informed of what the other competitor would

Mr. Quincy thought the Norris-Peters company knew that another bidder was in the field, but made their statement to Mr. Seymour before they knew this. He could not say that it was not from the Commissioner that he learned that the Norris-Peters company knew of another bid being made. Mr. Quincy went on to relate how at one time he had loaned money to Mr. Kenney. He felt bound to do this on account of a personal interest in him and because he had recommended him to the Commissioner. Mr. Quincy said that he had been informed that a man formerly concerned in the financial relations between himself and Kenney had been furnishing material for this attack, and that this had come to certain members of this committee. Senator Manderson, who took this to mean himself, asserted that he was not seeking the political secret of an adversary, but thought the matter bore on the credibility of the witness. Mr. Quincy said he had dictated this ent just before he came and he meant to make no accusation against any member of the committee. He understood that a certain person was furnishing material as to the matter of his former political and financial transactions with Kenney, and this statement was meant to provide for the contingency of such testimony being brought up. He did not mean to say, he explained, in reply to Senator Gorman, that either Senator Gorman or Senator Ransom had been present at any conference with Mr. Kenney and himself. Mr. Seymour had never known that he (Quincy) had loaned money to Mr. Kenney. Under examination by the commissioner. Mr. Quincy said his talks with Kenney in April as to securing the Patent Office printing did not have in view the securing of the contract for the corporation with which Kenney (the National Economist Publishing Company) was then connected, but contemplated the formation of an entirely new company, a new plant to be secured. It was proposed to obtain the plant of the Bell Lithographic Company. It was known that the Bell plant was not adequate to do the proposed work, but it was intended to secure other presses. When the contract was let he did not know that Mr. Kenney had an option on the Bell plant, but he understood from him that the Bell people were anxious for him to take the plant. Senator Gorman said at this point that the kernel of this statement was that this contract was secured through his (Mr. Quincey's) influence for a company that did not have facilities and which the next few months proved did not have the facilities to do the work. Mr. Quincy said he had based his recommendation on his personal belief in Mr.

Kenney's capacity and the probability of further increase in the plant. Senator Manderson asked when witness first lent money to Kenney or indorsed his paper after the first conversation in regard to the printing contract. Mr. Quincy was proceeding to state the circumstances of the debt when Mr. Manderson said he cared nothing about that, he simply desired to find a motive for his (Quincy's) interest in Kenney securing the

not go into matters concerning the national

Mr. Quincy then said his financial relations with Mr. Kenney did not concern the national Democratic committee or any public officer. He presented other people in these relations. Mr. Quincy then said that he had not advanced money to Kenney with a view to his own financial benefit through the operation of the printing contract. He felt that his security was good for the payment of the previous obligations which kenne owed him some thousands of dollars. The amount had increased since the printing contract Mr. Kenney, upon being sworn, testified that the capital stock of the National Lithographic Company is $20,000, three shares being paid in, one share owned by each of the incorporators-Horace Kenney, Geo. Dunn and W. C. Cook. The property of the company had been acquired by loans made by Mr. Kenney to the company. He had lent the company about $7.500. Profits from the Patent Office contract for the first six months had been about $5,000. His bid for the contract was made according to specifications furnished by the Commissioner and according to the contract of the Norris-Peters company for the previous year. No special permission for seeing the contract was necessary from the Commissloner. Witness believed when he made inquiries as to the contract that the Norris-Peters company would put no faith in the ability of any other company to get the contract away from it, or to do the work if they did so get it. He thought, therefore, that they would make no reduction in their bid from that of the previous year, and the small margin he allowed in his bid was based on this conviction. The committee adjourned subject to the call of the chair-

OUGHT TO BE MODIFIED.

Mr. Spooner Admits That Judge Jenkins's Order Was Too Broad. MILWAUKEE, March 3 .- Gen. James Mc-Naught, of New York, occupied the attention of Judge Jenkins's court to-day in behalf of the receivers. He held that all strikes were illegal, and that the wit of man could not devise a legal strike. He argued that the consequences of a strike must be taken into consideration in determining whether or not a set of men had a lawful privilege to strike, and, inasmuch as the majority of the strikes have been accompanied by lawlessness and destruction of property, he argued that the court had a clfic's property as it did.

perfect right to protect the Northern Pa-The arguments were concluded at 6 o'clock this evening and Judge Jenkins took the matter under advisement. John C. Spooner, for the receivers, and L. W. Spense, for the labor organizations, occupied the entire afternoon with their arguments. The important feature of the proceedings to-day was the admission made by Mr. Spooner that the injunctional writ ought to be modified. Mr. Spooner said: "So far as this order restrains men from conferring with the employes or advising, recommending or sanctioning their quitting the service of the receivers it is perhaps too broad, as your honor has suggested, and is liable to be misconstrued. In this particular perhaps it ought to be modified.

AGAINST NUNS AS SCHOOLMARMS.

Daughters of Liberty Will Appeal to the Courts to Gust the Sisters.

PITTSBURG, Pa., March 3 .- The National Council of the Daughters of Liberty will take up the controversy which has arisen over the employment of nuns as school teachers in the Thirty-fourth ward. Mr. G. E. Kepple, national councilor of the organization, left for the East to-night, and will attend a meeting of the national board in Brooklyn next week. Concerning the Thirty-fourth ward's adoption of nuns as schoolteachers, Mr. Kepple said:

"With other officers of the national board of the Daughters of Liberty I shall hold a consultation to secure assistance and act in concert with the Junior Order of American Mechanics. We believe that the condition of affairs in the Thirty-fourth ward is in direct opposition to the spirit of the Constitution, which provides for a complete separation of state and church." State Councilor Kerr, of the Junior O. U. A. M., says the contemplated legal action will be taken in a few days. The national legislative committees of the Junior O. U. A. M. held a meeting at the Seventh-avenue Hotel to-day. There were present W. A. Gordon, of Cleveland; B. A. Shanon, of Ann Arbor; Robert Carson, of Brunswick, N. J., and J. S. Reynolds, of Chicago. The object of the meeting was to take action on Colonel Stone's immigration bill, that will shortly come up in the House of Representatives. A committee from the Junior Mechanics will be sent to Washington to work in behalf of the measure. it was decided to send a circular defining the committee's position on the question of immigration to every council and lodge of all patriotic societies in the United States. This circular will be issued in a few days, as it is desirable that the order be fully informed as to the provisions of the bill before it comes to a vote. It was expected that some action would be taken in regard to the employment of nuns in the Riverside public school, but the matter was not called up. A member said the committee could not take any cognizance of the subject. It was the province of the local councils to take such action as may be considered nec-

Mr. Cleveland Spends Another Day on | to indulge in. the North Carolina Sounds.

ELIZABETH CITY, N. C., March 3.-The President has gone still further South and is probably at the end of his trip, and may even now be on his homeward way. The Violet to-day hoisted her anchor in Croatan Sound and, heading south and east, steamed into Pimlico Sound. The vessel then stood along the east coast, passing Bodies island lighthouse, a conspicuous object for many miles, with its alternate black and white stripes, and soon came in sight of Hatteras light. A landing was made on the cape and the party made another attempt upon the game, which at this point presented a greater variety than had yet been encountered, for, in addition to the water fowl which had been met in the upper sounds, the Hatteras country boasts of rabbits, red deer and other land game. The President was much interested in the country, which differs widely from the upper coast. Just before Hatteras is reached, the low, narrow sand spit, varied by a few dunes almost barren of any trace of vegetation, spreads out to the width of a few miles and is luxuriously clothed in vegetation, with many live oaks, sand cactus, thickets and cane brakes. Many fresh ponds lie hidden in the jungle connected by deep but narrow streams abounding with fish. The place is out of the way of all traffic, and little news of the doings of the party is likely to reach the outside world as long as it remains there.

HARD TIMES, INDEED.

One of Cincinnati's Largest and Oldest Breweries Assigns. CINCINNATI, O., March 3 .- The assignment of the Jackson Brewing Company to John D. Bobe this afternoon is announced by the officers to be only temporary, as the company has $400,000 of assets with which to meet $150,000 of pressing liabilities. When the company bought out the George Weber Brewing Company, four years ago, Leo Brigel became president and George J. Zitter secretary and treasurer. The capital stock was $300,000. Brigel, in buying out interests, placed a bonded indebtedness of $100,000 on the concern, and the threat of the holders of these mortgage bonds to apply for a receiver brought the sudden assignment. Papers would have been presented to court for a receiver to-day, but this procedure was headed off by the assignment The bondholders say the statement of at torneys will show a bad financial condition. MELBA'S REDHOT TEMPER.

She Wanted to Annihilate a Ticket Taker Who Insulted Her. New York Recorder.

Did I ever tell you, or even suggest to you, that Melba was the possessor of a lovely, full-fledged—indeed, an overripe temper? Like most artists, she is very excitable, and naughty words rise rapidly to those tuneful lips in a way that shocks by-standers. During the "Tannhauser" re-hearsals at the Metropolitan Opera House she had a neat little passage at arms with Nordica, and came out decidedly second best. Both ladies smiled sweetly in one another's handsome faces, and there were uttered crisp sentences, like "Ah, a specimen of Yankee manners, I presume!" and "Not at all; you are strangely mistaken. It is your colonial gaucherie," etc., etc., and et cetera. The two prime donne speak as they pass by, but they no longer give the kiss of the feminine Judas sort they were wont Melba did a funny thing last week. She went to the front gate at the Broadway side of the Opera House, and, being in a hurry, she pushed and elbowed her way through the crowd and was stepping by the young gentleman who officiates there as pastetoard snatcher. "Ticket, please," said that functionary, 'Sir, I wish to go in," said Melba, indignantly. "Ticket, please," was repeated again, but ery firmly "Don't you know who I am?" said Melba flushing scarlet. "I have no ticket, but I must get in; I am Mme. Melba." "You can't get in here without a ticket, If you are Mme. Melba you can go in by the stage entrance," this said quite nonchalantly. By this time there was a regular mob, all pushing and grumbling at the delay. One individual, looking like a clubman who had fined too well, leered at the now furious Australian diva, and said to her in husky and familiar accents: "Shay, I've got two ticketsh; come in wish me.' Her cup of anger and unhappiness overflowed at this, and there is no knowing what might have occurred if Max Hirsch nad not rushed up and passed her in. When she reached her dressing room she made such a row that you could have heard her five hundred yards off. They say her speech was blood-curdling, and one of the ten commandments writhed in shattered

fragments on the floor. "That man, that wretch, has got to come n here on his knees and beg my pardon. Me, Melba, the idea of such an insult!" There was such a to-do that later in the evening the young man went back and attempted to pacify the soprano by telling her that he was only fulfilling his duty and that Napoleon once commended and promoted a sentry who refused to let him by without the password. But Melba reused to see the parallel, and the young man withdrew, doubtless making mental memoranda as to the politeness of singers in general and Australian sopranos in par-

London News. A correspondent sends particulars of a case which occurred in Argentina. Some ten or twelve years ago an official in a north country bank who had embezzled the funds of the concern, took refuge in Argentina, and for a time Scotland Yard was at fault. At last a capable officer was sent to Buenos Ayres. He found that the defaulter had gone up the country and started sheep farming. He followed and succeeded in opening up an acquaintance which subsequently developed into intimacy. The pair became such friends that when the officer suggested a trip to Buenos Ayres for a change the ex-bank official readily

Equal to Ananias. Robert Collyer tells the story of a little girl with a vivid imagination which constantly led her into amazing extravagances regarding things which she claimed to have seen. One day, after an extraordinary exhibition of her inventive powers, her mother exclaimed in despair "Oh, my dear, my lear, my dear. Don't you know that Ananias and Sapphira fell down dead on account of the lies they told? Don't you remember that terrible story?" "Oh, yes," responded the child, unabashed, "I

SHOT IN ARKANSAS.

M. L. Kernodle, Supposed to Be from Indianapolis, Killed.

An Associated Press dispatch from Clarksville, Ark., received last night, says: "This afternoon M. L. Kernodle was shot and instantly killed by A. L. Rodgers, one of the most prominent young men of this city. Kernodle was a transient barber, whose home is supposed to be in Indianapolis, Ind., as papers found on his body show him to be a member of the Knights of Pythias Lodge in that city. It seems that Rogers and Kernodle had a difficulty last night at a dance, and this afternoon Rogers called Kernodle out of the barber shop, drew his pistol and shot him through the heart. At the coroner's inquest it was developed that Kernodle had a razor in his pocket, and it is likely that a plea of selfdefense will be made."

That Bond Problem.

To the Editor of the Indianapolis Journal, Noticing in last week's Journal that but one man in the United States treasury was able to determine the "upset" price of a 5 per cent. bond when the purchaser wished to realize only 3 per cent. on his investment, I have given the problem some attention, and beg leave to submit my rule. First, find the income to be derived from a 5 per cent. bond for the given time on the terms agreed upon; then of a 3 per cent. bond. The excess of the former over tha latter is equivalent to the premium plus 3 per cent, on the premium. To find the premium, divide the excess by the amount of one dollar for the given time at 3 per cent. Take, for instance, a $1,000 bond due in one year; at 5 per cent. the interest would be $50; at 3 per cent. it would be $30. Fifty dollars minus $30 equals $20; $20 divided by $1.03 equals $19.417. This, added to $1,000, equals $1,019.417, "upset" price for a one-year bond. Now, let us see whether that is correct

William Steinway, in Demorest. If you ask what has helped me most in life I will tell you it was a happy combination of family talents. My father, my two brothers and myself represented a totality of talent and skill in our particular field. We came here in 1850, and worked together for an end. We made planos the very best, and knew how. That led to other things, incidentally to wealth. I say "incidentally" because I do not sea why the wealthy man, the millionaire, if you please, should find life, in its true sense, so different from the average man. To be sure he does not have to worry over getting bread and butter, clothes and shelter; but, aside from these, the millionaire's life is made up of the usual complement of successes and failures, hopes, disappointments and ambitions. It is believed by many that wealthy men have no ambitions higher or nobler than money; these same people believing that higher ambition belongs only to those in poverty, or at best, to those of moderate means. Such a belief should be discouraged; for history, literature, art and science, and an acquaintance with men of wealth disprove it. Simply because a man is rich is no argument that he has no ambitions above or beyond money. As a matter of fact, wealth arouses ambitions which in poverty would have remained dormant; but the rich man is seldom taken seriously in his higher ambitions, and the general public look upon them merely as fads. So it is that wealthy men turn to their money. This is right. Instead of painting pictures, writing great books, or making scientific discoveries their ambition now is to make the best use of money, so that it will give the most help and benefit to others. This takes shape in many forms of philanthropy; evidence of noble and lofty ambitions. The Millionaire a Worker. Orlando B. Potter, in Demorest.

The difficulties of my boyhood are still fresh in my mind and still strangely influence my views of life. Those early years, and they were years of struggle, in which I bumped against human nature and studied it, did more to strengthen me in mind and character than on long eise Last L s come in my life since.
I consider it one of the most fortunate things to be born poor. The argument that the poor young man has not an equal chance with the rich young man is profoundly silly. In this age of development, rapidity of change, and national prosperity, the rise of a young man depends entirely upon his individual and faithful effort. We have a distinctly American disease: it is American push. It is contagious, and the sooner a young man is seized by it the sooner will he succeed. It is a mistake to suppose that million-aires do not work. Probably the greatest and saddest misunderstanding between the rich man and the poor is that the rich man does not know how much the poor man suffers, and the poor man does not know how hard the rich man works.
